1-3

Comic Evergreen Yeh (Taiwan)

Script Shang-Chiao Li (Taiwan)

This three-volume fantasy blends ecology and politics, exploring the young shaman's choices and growth as she leads a desperate humanity toward coexistence with nature in a conflict-ridden post-apocalyptic world.

40

In a collapsing world, a constantly moving island serves as the last sanctuary which preserves the animistic culture, where spirits and humans live together. Likat, the youngest navigator, unexpectedly inherits the role of "Island Seer" after her mother's abrupt departure. She must confront "The Unmoored"—countless sorrowful spirits from the outside world.

Meanwhile, Amano sensei, the female Leader of Redland City, fights tirelessly for her people's food security, only to be swept into Likat's dreams by a sudden storm. From opposite ends of the sea, the two women embark on a post-apocalyptic adventure woven through islands, food, sacred songs, and shared dreamscapes.

Before the age of ten, Likat lived in a world where she could only see spirits. Now, having "opened her eyes," she must learn to communicate with humans. Furthermore, as the Island Seer, she must master the ancient chants used to purify The Unmoored. Through her efforts, these spirits have been transformed into a harmless form she calls "Tufts." Likat is determined to uncover the root of their suffering, which means she must come to understand the world beyond her island.

The prequel to this work, rendered in a light-color style, gained significant popularity across Europe. Artist Evergreen Yeh once again employs a blend of watercolor and light ink, collaborating with screenwriter Li Shang-Chiao, known for her delicate portrayal of female characters, to create this brand-new main story.

In 2009, a sensitive year, a Chinese author's overland journey from Lhasa to Kathmandu becomes a confrontation with unspoken truths, conflicting realities, and the shifting lines of personal identity.

In 2009, the author and his wife return to Tibet. Familiar places have become unsettling surveillance zones; a familiar lama no longer recognizes them. They encounter a wanted photographer and witness a sky burial. Their bus is seized by a Tibetan official, yet they see a magnificent rainbow over Everest. In Kathmandu, they meet a bookseller wrapping banned books and a guesthouse owner who burned her documents in 1959. On these treacherous roads, time slows, leaving all confusion exposed.

From Fish Wu, author of Letters from Taipei, this full-color work showcases his unique visual style. He blends gongbi (fine-line) outlines with a "carved," woodblock-like colored pencil texture, capturing both the journey's exotic beauty and a profound reality impossible to grasp without being there.

The journey's two "crossings" are a metaphor for shifting identities, historical echoes, and conflicting realities. Between images and text, a deliberate hesitation reveals the unspoken weight and complex position of a Han Chinese observer. It is a silent, empathetic gaze, seeking to understand what cannot be said aloud.

A surreal journey of self-awakening, where reality and dreams intertwine, unlocking the long-buried soul of a woman caught in a monotonous life.

38

Lin Lu, once a researcher in Arctic, returns to her hometown to care for her mother, who is in a vegetative state. For seven years, she led a dull life as a high school teacher, her spirit numbed by routine. However, when she reunites with Yu Chen, a free-spirited, unconventional truck driver, Lin Lu's world begins to shift. Together, they traverse the line between reality and dream.

In Lin Lu's recurring lucid dream, she awakens on an island surrounded by a vast water body with a giant elephant-shaped rock. No matter how hard she tries, she cannot escape. After Yu Chen joins her in the dream, the boundary between dream and reality blurs. In a climactic moment, they release an elephant that leads Lin Lu to a profound awakening that frees her long-repressed soul.

With stylistic influences from Japanese Gekiga, this story blends surrealism and deep emotional layers. The author, a young Chinese woman living in Japan, has captivated fans of Gekiga and Galo culture through her Instagram stories.

In this unique narrative, elementary school teacher Roa and her ever-evolving AI assistant Riv embark on a fascinating journey through time, tracing the course of the Tamsui River from 1582 to 1983. Using ancient texts and archival materials, they reconstruct pivotal events along the riverbanks. However, as their journey unfolds, they uncover that history is not merely a record of truths but a complex tapestry woven with inconsistencies, interpretations, and imagination. This raises a profound question: what is the true meaning of documenting and studying history?

With the river serving as the geographical thread and time as the chronological axis, this book delves into the intricate interplay of time, space, and humanity in the making of history. It also challenges readers to reconsider how we define and interpret "truth".

By the story's end, readers learn that Roa is actually a young boy in a post-1983 world who has chosen this avatar while navigating a virtual reality. This twist challenges our perception of truth and reality, and raises questions about the future of historical record-keeping and learning in an AI-driven era.

#Ethnic Conflicts

After the Myanmar military coup in 2021, its citizens stood unprecedentedly together, while a cross-national Milk Tea Alliance had formed online. Despite the lack of sufficient international support, the people of Myanmar saw themselves as taking one last stand.

33

This graphic novel is a collaboration between the French writer Frédéric Debomy, an expert on Burmese politics, and the comic artist Lau Kwong Shing, an eyewitness to Hong Kong's pro-democracy movements. It is an account of the two years since the military coup in Myanmar, as well as the related historical and political contexts.

The story opens with the coup d'état that began on February 1st, 2021. Comprising various interviews with the author, conversations among friends, and words from Myanmar's public intellectuals and the government in exile, the narrative not only depicts the events that follow the coup, but also details changes in the social climate, differences between 88 Generation activists and Gen Z, and both domestic and international forces for change.

Compared to political protests in Ukraine and Hong Kong, Myanmar's pro-democracy movement appears internationally isolated, and the military government has continued its oppressive measures. Still, transcending ethnic lines, the people of Myanmar have banded together to fight authoritarian forces. And, on the Internet, the subsequent emergence of the Milk Tea Alliance further demonstrates the formation of new connections, based on democratic values, across Asian nations.

Ding, Pao-Yen (Taiwan)

A young engineer's affection for an outdated game character embarks on a hazardous journey that blurs the lines between the virtual gaming world and reality.

32

In 2088, engineer J stumbles upon a Dream Reality (DR) device, banned after its invention in 2073, at a flea market. Intrigued, J activates an old game, and is thrust into a world where electronic creatures abduct humans, compelling them to read books for brain monitoring.

DR makes everything seem hyper-real. J realizes that he stubbornly insists on using DR to enter the game for nothing else but meeting Saya, a character he once rescued in that world. Saya appears to develop consciousness over time and becomes J's constant companion. It's all a game, but J isn't sure whether it's a dream or reality. How genuine are the emotions? Have J's actions bugged Saya? Or is Saya a glitch in the game? A new unsettling subplot emerges as the boundaries between game and reality blur. Trapped in the game world, J and Saya find love, prompting Saya to restart the game repeatedly to keep their connection. Guided by a ram-headed character who seems to know the entire truth, J's subconscious awakens and determines to destroy the DR device, but which means Saya shall unavoidable being vanished.

Ding Pao-Yen is a contemporary artist and cartoonist. His love of online games and science fiction come together in a dream world like an active volcano that transforms into a bizarre, lava-like worldview in his work. The book was inspired by the author's love of role-playing in online games. He once grew fond of a minor female character in one of the games, but her story ended after she'd accomplished her mission. Still, the author returns to the game to visit her from time to time. The idea of "nothing happened" makes him appeared to be lonely, which eventually be the theme of the story.

A projection into the future of current pandemic realities, Super Supermarket envisions a world in which no one leaves their home, in which simply walking down the street can get you reported to authorities, and in which everything past the front door begins to provoke reactions of fear and anxiety. Cloistered in their homes, a new generation of children is growing up with no knowledge of the outside world or basic niceties – like wearing pants!

One day our protagonist is reading a picture book to her nephew, only to discover it contains forbidden depictions of playgrounds and supermarkets – things that no child should know about! Her hysterical complaints to customer service are resolved with a free gift of two tickets to the Super Supermarket Experience, an elite in-store shopping simulation intended to alleviate the rampant cabin fever of the near future. However, the tickets only serve to awaken our protagonist's long-suppressed retail desires, leading her down a spiral of temptation that can only end in disaster!

Known for her dark humor and willingness to address troubling topics, graphic novelist Pam Pam turns her unsparring eye to the psychological impact of pandemic restrictions, providing chillingly incisive social commentary while perfectly lampooning the ways in which we all went a little crazy while on lockdown.

Like Persepolis, Son of Formosa explores Taiwan's contemporary history through the story of an ordinary person. The tale reveals an ordinary person's perseverance despite the hardships he faces in turbulent times.

This series of graphic novels draws on the actual events of Tsai's life. At Taichung First Senior High School he was a trainee soldier and a good student; years later he was sentenced to ten years in prison for attending a high school book club. On release he worked in publishing and advertising, and founded Prince, a children's magazine which kept Taiwan's cartooning tradition alive during martial law. He raised funds to allow a rural little league team to compete in Taipei and, on retirement, became a human rights activist.

Tsai's life is Taiwan's recent history writ small. There is darkness, but always a light; hardship, but always the strength to endure. A simple yet graceful style faithfully recreates the historical scenes, with the accurate use of the Chinese, Taiwanese, and Japanese languages bringing those times to life. The warmth and vitality of the storytelling demonstrate that while we cannot control events, we can, as Tsai did, persevere through them.

Volume I: A Boy Who Loves to Read

(Soft pencil lines depicts Taiwan under Japanese rule and Tsai's carefree childhood)

In the 1930s, young Tsai Kun-lin grows up happily with the company of nursery rhymes and picture books on Qingshui Street, Taichung under Japanese rule. With the emergence of war comes parades, air raids, and conscription. No one can escape. After the war, the book-loving teenager tries hard to learn Mandarin and believes he is finally stepping towards a comfortable future, but little does he know, a dark cloud awaits him ahead.

Volume II: Ten Years on Green Island

(Illustrations resembling woodcuts express the depressing experience of Tsai's detention and imprisonment)

In his second year at Taichung First Senior High School, Tsai attends a book club hosted by his teacher and is consequently arrested on a false charge of taking part in an "illegal" assembly. After being tortured, he is sentenced to ten years in prison, deprived of civil rights for seven years, and sent to Green Island for reformation in 1951. Until his release in September 1960, Tsai, a victim of the White Terror era has spent ten years of his youth in prison on an unjust charge.

*Full content available in English.

Volume III: The Prince Period

(Screentone and fountain pen lines depicts Tsai's active days as a comic magazine editor)

Discharged from prison, Tsai works as an editor at the comic magazine Oriental Youth. In 1966, comic publications become subject to censorship, many of his friends lose their job. Tsai decides to found a children's magazine, Prince, for a group of unemployed artists and his old inmates who cannot find work anywhere else. He also sponsors the Red Leaves, a little league baseball team from Taitung, making possible their trips to compete in Taipei and starting a baseball fever in Taiwan. However, the magazine's mounting financial losses leaves Tsai in debt and eventually bankrupt.

Volume IV: "I Am a Thousand Winds"

(Contemporary Taiwan is portrayed in a style resembling documentary photography and contemporary art)

The rising political opposition movement and the end of martial law urges Tsai and his old inmates on Green Island to initiate a movement to rehabilitate White Terror victims. After retiring, Tsai serves as a volunteer at the White Terror Memorial Park, where he promotes human rights education and looks back on the hard times in his life.

Adoor Yeh (Taiwan)

In an indigenous community, a designer, members of a foundation, local elders, and young people who have returned home from cities all come together to contribute to a better future for the community.

Members of the Ai-Hsin Organic Agricultural Foundation run a revitalization program in a Bunun community. They help preserve a variety of crops in the Species Conservation Fields and build traditional houses to bring back old Bunun culture. They have also invited a designer to develop a brand identity, an ecologist to document and analyze local ecosystems, a young cook to create creative indigenous dishes, and a comic artist to guide local elders to draw memories of their past.

This team of enthusiasts from Taipei hope they won't make the same mistakes as most regional revitalization teams do — leaving no legacy behind after the program ends and bringing no benefit to the community despite selling their products.

Drawing from her personal experiences, Adoor Yeh's vivid portrayal of the difficulty of regional revitalization work is straightforward but not overly critical. Through her careful documentation of everyday life, she shows that small efforts can accumulate to a large impact.

Amidst the company of his sister and niece, a young man reluctantly checks into a mental institution for a short-term recovery. The tranquility of the place quickly becomes unbearable. The friendliness and peculiarity of fellow patients only fuel his agitation, compelling him to escape at all costs. Yet, the exit seems non-existent, and even those he conversed with are claimed to be his hallucinations. In a basement, he encounters his younger self, engaging in a blame game, but neither can lead the other to freedom. They watch memories unravel like film reels, revisiting the multitude of traumas endured throughout his life. Rejecting this review, he seeks out other patients, hoping to find a way out together. However, his sole like-minded companion meets a tragic end. Disillusioned, his violent acts intensify, culminating in an attempt on another patient's life. Now, united against him, they expose the truth: he is not a victim but a perpetrator, and they wish for his demise. Scarred and broken, he realizes the world harbors no kindness, succumbing to complete collapse.

Ten years in the making, A Trip to the Asylum incorporates Pam Pam Liu's personal experiences as well as extensive research into the literature of mental illness, including works such as Erving Goffman's Asylums: Essays on the Social Situation of Mental Patients and Other Inmates and Bessel van der Kolk's The Body Keeps the Score: Mind, Brain, and Body in the Healing of Trauma. With its indy comic aesthetic, absurd humor, and fast pacing, A Trip to the Asylum delivers deep issues in an entertaining package, bringing mental illness out of the shadows and into the realm of relatable, everyday interactions.

Letters from Taipei tells a captivating story of perseverance and survival that spans three countries and three generations of Fish Wu's family. Wu based this graphic novels on extensive interviews of his grandmother, an elderly woman from a small town in China whose life was buffeted by numerous political upheavals.'

Through her foggy recollections, Wu's grandmother brings us back to the tumult of 1950s China. Her father and uncle, both teachers running their village's small private school, are criticized and abused for being intellectuals and refusing to join the Land Reform Movement. The family's property is confiscated and destroyed, and the threats of violence and imprisonment become ever-present in their lives.

Eventually, the brothers are forced to make a pivotal decision. One decides to stay in China, and the other choses to secretly flee to Taiwan. It is not until decades later, after martial law is lifted in Taiwan in 1989, that an unexpected letter from Taipei suddenly reconnects the long-separated family.

With his masterful drawing skill, Fish Wu uses blue ballpoint pens to lovingly bring three generations of his family to life on the page. In this intimate tale, readers join the author's ancestors as they are torn apart and brought together once more, bearing witness to the historical turmoil and twists of fate that forced so many 20th century Chinese families to be split between the PRC and Taiwan.

When my mother gets cancer for the second time, she asked if I would keep her company through her chemotherapy. And of course, I said yes. But how am I meant to cope with it all? Pam Pam uses a clean but comical style to portray the joys and sorrows of accompanying a loved one through an illness.

Despite the technical and medical wonders of the modern age, cancer remains one of humanity's biggest enemies. And while we all know the patients themselves suffer, what of their loved ones, who find themselves suddenly becoming caretakers, struggling with negative emotions, drained by the demands upon them? They too face a long physical and emotional battle.

Good Friend, Cancer is a daughter's first-hand account of her mother's chemotherapy treatment. Finding herself now responsible for caring for her mother, she worries as she waits in the hospital that maybe her genes mean the same fate is in store for her. And she is also resentful – she has missed out on a chance to follow her dreams and travel overseas. And most of all, and most unanswerably: why her?

Graphic novelist Pam Pam's simple style and plain strokes provide a humorous look at a harsh reality and turn misfortunes into charming tales. Over the course of 18 chapters, Pam Pam examines the traditional roles of a "daughter" and the pressures of being an adult as she portrays truths about family relationships which we all recognize – even if we cannot admit to it.

In a wordless yet riveting work of social justice illustration reminiscent of Seuss's The Lorax, Yang Yu-Chi tells a tale of hard work and exploitation that rings true for readers all across the world. Factory is the story of Mama Penguin, who assembles dolls for export at a massive factory at the South Pole. Paid too poorly even to afford the dolls she makes, her greatest pleasure is assembling dolls from discarded parts to give to her daughter. Every day she gets closer to the twenty-year retirement cutoff, for which the company has promised her good retirement pay and a ticket to a restful old age.

Yet a mere two weeks before her time is up, the factory owner shuts the place down and moves all operations abroad, where salaries are cheaper. Compensation is meager, protests are useless, and the only resource for many is to look for work in their old age, a bitter option only open to the lucky few.

The silent despair of Factory's illustrated narrative intensifies when one learns that the story is true: the illustrator's mother experienced just such a misfortune after decades of factory labor. Now, her son tells her story.
